

BUCKET LIST GIRLS TRIPS

There's no cooler way to log QT with friends old or new than on a major bestiemoon.

MARRAKESH

With more spas than any other Middle Eastern country, Morocco is the ultimate treat-yo'self retreat. The Red City is ground zero: Whether you splurge at the famous La Mamounia (shown here; treatments start at $85) or try the more affordable La Sultana ($50 and up), spa culture revolves around the hammam experience. First, you'll head to the steam room to open your pores, then you'll get lathered up with olive oil-based black soap and exfoliated with a traditional kessa glove. Finally, you'll be doused (whee!) with cold water.

ISLA HOLBOX

If you prefer your white-sand beaches sans lovey-dovey couples, skip Mexico's Tulum in favor of this tiny island (pronounced eez-la hol-bosh), a two-and-a-half-hour drive and 25-minute ferry ride north of Cancun. Only 26 miles long and one mile wide, it's essentially a sandbar—with few cars and spotty Wi-Fi. Ditch the phones and get IRL face time at one of the newest hotels, like Punta Caliza (shown here; starting at $240/night). If you can tear yourself away from the property—all 12 rooms connect directly to this incredible pool—go diving with whale sharks, visit the Cenote Yalahau swimming hole, and pose with the flamingos at Punto Mosquito.

WILLAMETTE VALLEY

No need to head to Burgundy to bond over bottles of pinot noir—northwest Oregon is also known for producing the juicy reds. Of the more than 550 wineries in the region, many—including Stoller, Penner Ash, Et Fille, and Remy—are run by women. And since most are small, family-owned operations, you might just find the winemakers themselves leading your tour.

Bunk down at the extremely Instagrammable The Vintages Trailer Resort (starting at $115/night), where you and your crew get your own retrofitted retro camper.

Stoller Family Estate in Dayton has 215 acres of vineyards, 121 of which are solely dedicated to producing grapes for pinots. Cheers!

SINGAPORE

As stunning as Singapore is by day (this panorama from the sky-high Marina Bay Sands' pool is especially jaw-dropping), the city comes alive after dark. Drink decadent gin cocktails at Atlas, party at speakeasy Employees Only, and soak in the skyline (and spritzes) at Caffe Fernet. When you're hungry, hit the streets for Michelin-starred hawker fare like chili crabs and bak chor mee (a pork noodle dish). The city is consistently ranked as one of the world's safest, so night crawling with your girls is NBD.

The longer the stall lines at Chinatown Street Market, Maxwell Road Hawker Centre, or Lau Pa Sat, the better the food.

Sundowners at Caffe Fernet come with a view of the futuristic Marina Bay Sands.

BANFF

Push your limits—together—in the Canadian Rockies, whether you're hard-core climbers, casual hikers or skiers, or just want to glamp with a view. It's a wilderness of contrasts: fields of wildflowers against craggy mountains, jewel-toned lakes next to blindingly white glaciers. Join up with one of the female-led tours run by Yamnuska Mountain Adventures (trips start at $1,358 per person) or Sarah Hueniken Guiding (trips start at $473 for two people).

How to Not Drive Each Other Crazy

NIX MONEY FIGHTS

Instead of constantly Venmo-ing, track spending in Splitwise (free on iPhone and Android). Each person enters costs as you go; when you're ready to settle up, the app splits the balance among you.

SET EXPECTATIONS EARLY

If you're the go-go type and your friend is super chill, that's fine—but you should both agree on itinerary goals beforehand, like which activities are musts, which are maybes, and which are hell nos.

TALK ABOUT YOUR FEELINGS

Spending 24/7 with someone is tough. Need a little alone time? Being rushed through certain sights? Address ~feelings~ in the moment so you won't snap at the first signs of hunger or sleepiness.
